Many of the graves contained no mortuary objects whatever, which is unusual. Shell beads, ornaments of shell, awls, and tubes of bone, arrow-smoothing stones, scrapers and knives of obsidian and chert, red, green, yellow, and black paint were commonly found, also fragments of mats, coiled basketry, and pahos. Clinging to one skull was a fragment of a mosaic earring, formed of oblong, rectangular plates of turquoise set Fourteenth Annual Report of the Bureau of American Kthnology, p. 490. NAT MUS 1901 21 on a tablet of wood; beyond this, very little turquoise came to light. The collection secured here was small, though varied. Of stone, there are axes of actinolite (Plate 55, fig. 8), a material prized by the ancient Hopi and Zufii; spherical battering hammers of fossil...
