Ho foresaw, in his own bizarre fashion, an International League, which sheld unite the north and south, the east and the west, and eonvert Geography from being the foe of Liberty and Fraternity. The exhibition in the field of Mars was not his only eontribution to that great end. He was also the untiring advoeate of one eommon tongue, or universal language, as one of the praetieal means of effecting a general international union. He eonsidered truly that the divers tongues of Babel must eease before the world beame a eity of peae. He had aseertained, through his own travels, hew mueh the differenees of language impeded the progress of human intereourse, and he was ineessantly promulgating the doetrine, that for the human rae to beome one people, there must exist one...
