

Running Deep with Strangers: A Must Fo Human Survival (Paperback)

By Buzz Stevens

Createspace, United States, 2014. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 150 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .My most disturbing premonition, by virtue of the fact I was a Christian minister, led me to strongly suspect the intimacy experienced in profound single encounters with strangers might be triggered by an inborn drive possibly separate from one s belief patterns and cultural influences. Nature has left us with an innate source of pure compassion that may work best between total strangers. It s likely the only way to overcome the indifference we feel toward our neighbors and masses of alien motorists we pass daily. Countries, family units and faith communities may be generating empathy that winds up denying what belongs to outsiders. The Insula is a cranial organ that is located at the top of our heads where we sense love and hate, appreciation and bitterness, self-confidence and humiliation, trust and distrust, empathy and scorn, pride and humiliation, truthfulness and deception, punishment and guilt. It emerged from darkness approximately 15 years ago by Antonio Demasio, a neuroscientist. He claimed the organ plays a starring role in our behavior. Faith members need to somehow find a way...
